Excerpt: . . . them and his version of the interview (as it is called) with Prescott at Portland is entirely different from Prescotts. Then whom was the learned judge to believe The plaintiff's evidence in important particulars contradicts that of Gale and Anna. Prescott also gave evidence in rebuttal and Cushing Adams, superintendent of Casein Company of America at one time, gm-e evidence. He is a brother of the plaintiff. He said of his brother that he was a very good man and came in touch with situations, and the idea was for him to be very familiar with the veneer busilt was necessary for him to have the knowledge of what veneer is, and what it can be produced for in different parts of the country. He speaks of what took place between Gale, his brother and himself when the plaintiff was etnployed to enter the employ of the Gale Manufacturing Company, and his evidence. contradicts that of Gale. On one occasion, on the 24th of April; Gale wrote to the witness: Your brother was much interested in the veneer business, and we are much pleased with him, and believe he will prove a valuable man for us in the business. I shall not quote any further from the evidence. As to improper admission of evidence of a letter of the 19th July, 1902, it seems to me that, whether properly admitted or not, it did not influence the learned judge in coming to a decision....
