Reviews

The book is great and fantastic. It is written in straightforward words and phrases rather than difficult to understand. You won't really feel monotony at any time of your respective time (that's what catalogues are for regarding should you question me).

F6 2009p OCLC Number: (OCoLC)537546917 Subject: Environmental management -- International cooperation. Excerpt: . . . 11 misreading of the principle of common but differentiated responsibilities and respected capabilities. And we do not agree that only the actions of developed countries should be submitted to a serious transparency and accountability regime, including peer review by other countries, while the major developing countries should be subject to no peer review at all unless the actions were paid for by developed countries. The mentality that looks at the world through those lenses will not produce an agreement in Copenhagen. We have to do better. After all, we are not engaged right now in a debating society about the exegesis of section X of subpart 1 of sub-subpart B of the Framework Convention or the Bali Action Plan. We are seeking to put in place a new agreement based, broadly on the concepts of those underlying documents, to be sure, intended to safeguard our future and the future of our children, to take an important step, in a word, toward saving the planet and improving the economic, environmental, and natural security future of America and the world. This is a profound undertaking, it is a profound responsibility, and we need to all treat it as such. The sooner we get past the mentality of resisting responsible action and the sooner we get into the mentality of searching for pragmatic common ground, the better off we will be. Ninety-seven percent of the growth of emissions between now and 2030 is projected to come from developing countries, and about 50 percent of that from China alone. We...
